We offer an exciting opportunity for an Associate Professor in Indigenous Health to join our world-leading institution at James Cook University (JCU). A full-time, continuing appointment this position is based in Emerald

WHAT YOU CAN ACCOMPLISH IN THE ROLE

The Senior Lecturer / Associate Professor, Indigenous Health works closely with the Director and the CQRRH leadership team to ensure a successful health workforce pipeline, student placements; improve access, participation and success for Indigenous students in health-related careers and provide expertise in Australian Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander knowledge. A key role will be to vitalize rural and remote Indigenous student participation in health career programs, promote cultural competency and embed Indigenous perspectives into clinical placements, CPD and CQRRH health workforce programs.

WHAT YOU WILL BRING TO THE ROLE

As a passionate and dedicated health professional, you will have relevant registration/accreditation and will have, or be working towards, a relevant doctoral qualification and scholarly outputs in relation to Australian Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander knowledge, culture and heritage, histories, and issues that impact on Australia's Indigenous people. You can also demonstrate a proven track record in research in an area related to Australian Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander knowledge and perspectives, health, and/or workforce. Your experience in health and workforce innovation and policy influence, managing remote Indigenous student recruitment and support programs; and remote clinical placement programs will see you provide important strategic leadership across the JCU CQRRH and contribute to our mission to improve the health of remote, rural, and indigenous populations.
