

Nurses, are you new to primary health care, or want to mentor someone who is?

The Transition to Practice course is open to nurses wanting to upskill and increase their knowledge.

Northern Queensland Primary Health Network (NQPHN) are partnering with Australian Primary Health Care Nurses Association (APNA) to assist nurses in primary healthcare by funding additional places in the Transition to Practice Program.

Whatever your age and whatever nursing journey stage you're at, APNA's here to help nurses flourish.

APNA's Transition to Practice Program is a eight-month education, support, and mentoring program for nurses new to primary health care. Nurses transitioning into primary health care will be matched with an experienced nurse mentor.

We are looking for:

- » nurses new to primary health care, both recently graduated and experienced nurses
- » nurses who have worked in primary care for some time but want to improve their skills and knowledge
- » engaged, motivated, and committed nurses with over four or more years' experience in primary health care to become clinical and professional mentors. Remuneration is provided to complete training and work with mentees.

Don't let this opportunity be the one that got away, find out more at www.apna.asn.au/transitiontopractice
